Jim Nolen (c), agriculture services officer for Fidelity Bank, explains use of pocket size calculator for projecting farm income to Sammy Martin (l) and Keith Harris (r) both full time young farmers in Appomattox.

Young Farmers Discuss Finance

Jim Nolen, agriculture services officer for Fidelity Bank, was guest speaker at the regular meeting of the Appomattox Young Farmers Association this past Tuesday. Mr. Nolen discussed trends in farm finance with fifteen young farmers and agriculture instructors.

According to Mr. Nolen, farm finance has undergone many changes in the past few years. Some of the changes discussed were: (1) Farmers need to be able to project their credit over a period of time. (2) Farmers need certainty of loan money. (3) Consultation service of bankers to farmers and (4) Farmers programing credit just as they program crops, breeding, etc.

Agriculture is Virginia's biggest business – 4 billion dollars per year. Today there is a greater opportunity for success in farming and for failure, unless farmers keep up with the trends in farming and farm finance.

Chairman for the meeting was Sammy Martin, Young Farmer President. Advisors are Barry Sauls and Dennis Torrence.

No-Tillage Farming Means More Yield Per Acre— Less Labor Per Bushel

Turn over profits without turning over the soil when you raise corn the no-till way. You reduce costs because chemical energy replaces mechanical energy. No-tillage conserves moisture. Conserves soil, too, because it checks erosion. And it saves time by reducing the number of trips you have to make over the field.

Do the job with these materials from Southern States

- Paraquat CL, the chemical that replaces your plow by killing top growth.
- AAtrex brand of atrazine for season-long weed control.
- Diazinon 14G to control rootworms and other harmful insects.
- Southern States fertilizer, including starter fertilizer, nitrogen in solution (which also serves as a carrier for herbicides), plus phosphate and potash.
- Southern States seed corn—an outstanding array of recommended hybrids.

Let us show you how no-tillage can raise your income while cutting costs.

Letter To The Editor

Editor's Mailbox,
The Times-Virginian
Appomattox, Virginia

Dear Sir:

For a historian or genealogist, the courthouse is a fount of information. Whenever he makes up his mind to do a work, the first place he heads for is the county courthouse.

Therefore anyone who strives to put a work into chronological order about the past of Appomattox County is handicapped before he starts.

The great fire that destroyed the Appomattox County Courthouse in 1892 saw to that. In using the adjective "great" in this instance, we do not envision a high building containing the archives of a county, but we see a catastrophe far greater than that.

We see an area that was drawn into history by the guiding hand of fate, making it one of the shrines of our nation. With this, however unfortunate it may be, we see the futility that surely must be engendered when one tries to orient the area to its historical place in the annals of the nation.

Indeed, the fire of 1892 cut a gap in the vista of history that can never be replaced.

Few people have had the good fortune of having Biblical records and other such sources of vital statistics passed down to them unscathed.

Those who haven't will find themselves asking for assistance from such media as the Times-Virginian as this writer has.

To be sure, I must say "Thanks," to The Times-Virginian for its understanding of the situation.

Due to its appreciation of the circumstances, this writer has found facts about his ancestors that couldn't possibly have been found in any other way.

Recently I received a surprising letter from Mr. Cornelius F. Cawthorne, of Belleville, New Jersey, who had read the two letters that the Times-Virginian so graciously published for me.

When I wrote the first letter to the Times-Virginian all that I had to go on was that my father had said he was kin to the Cawthornes.

I suspected that the Martha Conner who married James P. Cawthorne was Robert Conner's (My grandfather) sister but I didn't know for certain.

However, Mr. Cornelius Cawthorn, from an old Appomattox family, confirms the relationship. He informed me that James P. Cawthorne and Martha Conner Cawthorne were his great grandparents. Martha's brother Robert and another brother, Joel Conner had adjoining farms which probably came about by a division of the property of Edmund Conner who had lived at Walker's Church in 1840.

Mr. Cawthorne also confirmed the relationship of the Conner family to some of the Webbs. And he also confirmed the relationship of the Webbs to the Trents.

Therefore, by deduction, we know for certain that Louvenia Trent Conner was the daughter of William Trent of Clover Hill. William Trent and Edmund Conner were neighbors in the year of 1840 and both were electors who voted for Martin Van Buren. Quite naturally Louvenia and Robert, daughter and son, of the two men became acquanted and later married.

I have always been fascinated by the musical ability of my grandfather and the fame that came to him because of it.

People, not only came from faraway places to hear him play his violin but his instrument was carried by his comrades while he was in the Confederate Army in the Civil War.

One time my father and I were listening to the radio, long before television came along, when Fritz Krisler was introduced to the radio audience. The virtuoso gave a performance that I thought was great.

My father said, "Do you think he is good?" I said, "He's one of the greatest in the country."

He said, "Why he couldn't hold a light for my father."

I said, "Well, if he was so good why didn't he make a career of music?"

He said that he had been asked to turn professional.

I said, "Well, why didn't he?"

He explained to me that people had different attitudes about things in those days. There was very little prestige for a talented musician and to take pay for giving a musical performance just wasn't the thing in Appomattox County.

Genius could not spread its wings and fly as it can today. It's wings were clipped by the customs of another world.
